The first part of the paper discusses the general theory of the subject. It is divided into two main sections: the first section deals with the general theory, and the second section deals with the special theory. The general theory is based on the principle of least action, which states that the path taken by a particle is the one that minimizes the action. This principle is used to derive the equations of motion for a particle in a potential field. The special theory deals with the case of a particle in a uniform magnetic field. It is shown that the motion of the particle is a combination of a circular motion and a linear motion along the direction of the magnetic field. The frequency of the circular motion is called the cyclotron frequency, and it is independent of the energy of the particle. The linear motion is called the drift motion, and it is caused by the inhomogeneity of the magnetic field.

The second part of the paper discusses the experimental results. It is shown that the theoretical predictions are in good agreement with the experimental observations. The cyclotron frequency is measured as a function of the magnetic field strength, and it is found to be independent of the energy of the particle. The drift velocity is also measured, and it is found to be proportional to the inhomogeneity of the magnetic field. The results of the experiment are compared with the theoretical predictions, and it is concluded that the theory is correct.
